A few things about Alice, and her wonderful life.

Alice was always a happy dog who could take all the attention anyone could muster (and then some). She had all the qualities one looks for in a great pet - take it from me.

She was also inseparable from her litter mate, Belinda.

In the beginning, Alice only had to share rides & outings with her sister,

But then out-of-towners started showing up - and even dogs from out-of-state!

However, Alice always accepted these new friends which made her life interesting & active. Here she is sharing her ride with lots of other new buddies. None-the-less she was always open to sharing and never was jealous no matter how many others dogs came into her life.

Alice really enjoyed Sundays at dog beach in Del Mar - and for 5 years when alpha-dog Jerry was not working, Alice knew Wednesdays was Beach Day” (usually 6AM)

Although going to Del Mar and Ocean Beach was a regular event for Alice, she also looked forward to her 4 walks every week end at a near by trail. She knew also that her contract called for 3 more walks on the same trail during the middle of the week. This was also supplemented by 4 more walks in the hi-brow neighborhood of "Kensington". Although Alice is shown last in the above photo - she preferred to be in 3rd position most of the time. (However, always leading the pack was Kirby - who had the youngest paws.).

Here's Alice in Kensington (at the door) - watching home values appreciate right before her eyes. Although she preferred Escondido and access to the orange grove, her weekly trip to "Van Dyke" broke up any possible boredom between trail walks, orange groves, and trips to the beach.

When back in Escondido, Alice kept others in line with the exception of Morgan, Kirby, and Belinda!.

The gang always knew what time it was - and had alpha-dog well trained for their walk. Alice always positioned her self to enable a quick get away to the side gate.

Alice learned that the quality of her life had been directly proportionate to the dogs she surrounded herself. That made her a beautiful dog with a wonderful personality. She will be missed terribly.
